

Carolina Caycedo: Land of Friends

28 May 2022 – 29 Jan 2023

Please return this guide after use. Thank you.

Carolina Caycedo makes work that considers people and nature's social and political agency, whilst addressing environmental justice and cultural and environmental biodiversity. Working with video, performance, sculpture, installation and drawing, Caycedo's work features studio practice and fieldwork with communities impacted by large-scale infrastructure and other extraction projects.

Movement, displacement, connection, language and exchange are key themes in her work, which she approaches through a strong commitment to feminist principles and a deeply ethical engagement with the world. Caycedo embraces decolonial ideas and Indigenous cosmologies and proposes counter-narratives to extractivist, colonial and patriarchal approaches that bring destruction, violence and inequalities to our world.

Land of Friends is Caycedo's first survey exhibition in Europe. It is also a kind of homecoming for the artist, who was born in London to Colombian parents. Her family left London a few years later, but Caycedo came back to live there as a young adult before moving to Puerto Rico and later to Los Angeles, where she is based today. The title of the exhibition refers to the meaning of Yuma, the ancestral name of Colombia's Magdalena River. It is also borrowed from the title of one of Caycedo's works, YUMA, or the Land of Friends (2014), which is included in the exhibition. Land of Friends proposes the exhibition as a space of encounter, between the works and visitors, but also between contexts from across the world, reminding us that rivers are the veins of the planet – living entities that connect communities and ecosystems.

The Yuma River is central to Caycedo's life and work. It is one of Colombia's major waterways, which was renamed Magdalena in 1501 by the Spanish during their colonisation of the Americas. Until then, the river was called Yuma, named by the Muisca peoples several centuries earlier – a name still used by local inhabitants. Yuma became the starting point for Caycedo's long-term project Be Dammed (Represa/Represión) (2012–ongoing), which takes multiple forms and examines the environmental and social impact of dam projects, whilst highlighting the right of self-determination of people and rivers as sovereign beings. Be Dammed includes workshops and collective actions, which she refers to as 'geochoreographies', installations and large-scale photographic portraits of rivers, river drawings and an artist's book titled Serpent River Book (2017). Through Be Dammed, Caycedo counters dominant ideologies and narratives from multinationals and governments that promote and implement extractivist projects, which have a destructive effect on local ecosystems. Each work grows organically out of what the artist refers to as ‘spiritual fieldwork’ – field research that connects with local territories in depth through long-term relationships with riverine communities adversely affected by the privatisation of waterways.

As objects of connection between people and bodies of water, traditional cast fishing nets are central characters in Caycedo’s work. They first appeared in her two-channel video essay

Spaniards Named Her Magdalena, But Natives

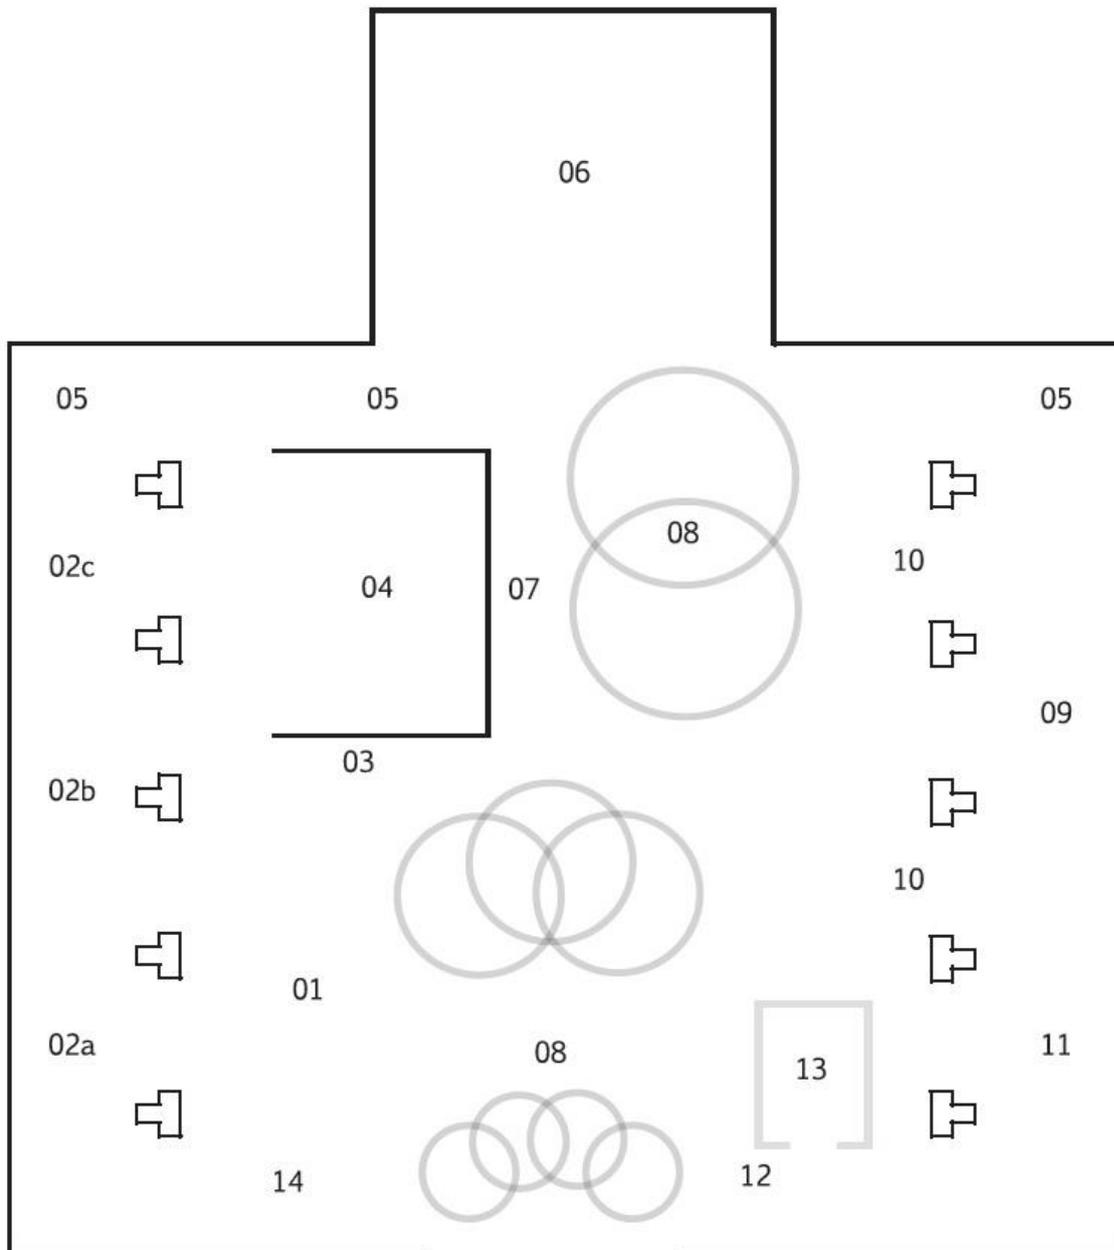

Call Her Yuma (2013), through traditional fishermen and women. They also became key elements in performances such as Atarraya

(2015) and Geocoregrafías (2014) in which the body is used as a political tool and the fishing net as a visual symbol of resistance. For Caycedo, a 'geochoreography' is an everyday gesture that is intrinsic to a specific geography, repetitively performed in relation to the immediate environment, such as casting a net or washing gold in the riverbank. Caycedo first used fishing nets in sculptural form in 2015 in three works, Yuma, Yaqui, and Elwha, which embodied three rivers in the Americas at different stages of privatisation or restoration. This shift towards sculptural work led the artist to develop a series of hanging sculptures made with traditional fishing nets titled Cosmotarrayas, of which the large-scale installation Plomo y Brea (2018) is presented here. The artist often dyes each work, and attaches various symbolic objects collected during field research. Each Cosmotarraya is linked to specific people, rivers, traditions, and cultures. Caycedo conceives them as symbolic objects that cast visual spells and embody the resistance of riverine communities against corporations and governments who seek to privatise bodies of water.

01 Serpent River Book, 2019

72 page accordion fold, offset, printed canvas

hardcover, elastic band

02 Water Portraits Series, 2016-ongoing

a. Wanaawna, 2019

Photograph printed on cotton canvas

b. Wanaawna Meets Salty Waters, 2019

Photograph printed on cotton silk

c. San Gabriel, 2019

Photograph printed on cotton canvas

03 YUMA, or the Land of Friends, 2014

Digital print on acrylic. Courtesy the artist,

Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles and

Instituto de Vision, Bogota

04 Spaniards Named Her Magdalena, But Natives Call Her Yuma, 2013

Two-channel HD video installation, 26:06 min.

Courtesy the artist, Commonwealth and Council,
Los Angeles, and Instituto de Vision, Bogota

05 River Drawings Series, 2016-ongoing All marker on Canson paper

- a. Yuma, 2016
- b. Yaqui, 2016
- c. Elwha, 2016
- d. Watu, 2016
- e. Iguacu, 2016

Both Collection of Musee d'art contemporain de la Haute-Vienne Chateau de Rochechouart

f. Pisisbaiya, 2017

g. Ume - Vindel, 2018

Both courtesy the artist and Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles, California

06 Patron Mono, 2018

Three-channel HD video with sound, 4:32 min.

Courtesy the artist, Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles and Instituto de Vision, Bogota

07 Tyne Catchment, 2022

Color pencil on paper. Courtesy the artist and Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles

08 Plomo y Brea (Lead and Tar), 2018

Nine artisanal fishing nets, hemp, nylon, lead, steel, tar, fabric dye. Collection of Banco de la Republica, Colombia

09 My Feminine Lineage of Environmental

Struggle-Expansion 1, 2019. Printed cotton canvas. Courtesy the artist and Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles

10 Women's Banner Group, Durham Gala

Banner, 2017-18

Textile. Courtesy Women's Banner Group

11 Not in My Name, 2017

Video, 20:50 min. Courtesy the artist,

Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles and

Instituto de Vision, Bogota

12 Caminemos Juntas (Let's Walk Together)

2010

Tent and metal structure. Collection of Museo de

Arte Contemporaneo de Castilla y Leon and the citizens of the city of Leon

13 Amber Films, Of Whole Heart Cometh Hope,

2018

Video, 42 min. Courtesy Amber Films

14 Museo de la Calle (Street Museum),

1998/2022

Donated handmade objects. Courtesy the artist and

Colectivo Cambalache

All works courtesy the artist unless otherwise stated.

A range of works in the exhibition explore resistance and the forms it can take – a important theme in the artists practice. Banners are key tools of protest, which Caycedo has adopted in her own work. Her banner My Feminine Lineage of Environmental Struggle-Expansion 1 (2019)

invokes the voices of over 150 women environmental defenders from around the world. It is part of an ongoing series of portraits titled Genealogy of Struggle (2017–ongoing), which seeks to construct a visual history of environmental activism as a teaching tool.

Caycedo was keen to connect the exhibition to the UK context and her video Not in My Name (2017) takes us back to February 2003, when the largest protest against the war in Iraq was held across the world. The artist filmed the London protest, showing the wide range of slogans and banners used by protesters. A banner created by The Women's Banner Group for the Durham Miners Gala in July 2018 is included in the exhibition to connect worldwide resistance histories with local feminist narratives and initiatives. This same banner is represented in Caycedo's work Tyne Catchment (2022), a new commission specially made for the exhibition. It presents multiple perspectives and reference points of the River Tyne across the years. These include vignettes of current sites, ecosystems, historical events, and mythological tales. The work notably features the region's historic bridges and industrial past, political gatherings, labour movements, migrant communities, and distinctive folklore.

This exhibition has been curated by Irene Aristizábal, Head of Curatorial and Public Practice at BALTIC.

Land of Friends is generously supported by the Exhibition Circle: Beate and Christopher Chee, Arlene and Andy Hurwitz, Liana Krupp and Ann Soh Woods. With the support of Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles.